

But when he began to excuse himself in such a manner as became a man of conversation like him, he was stopped at once and taken into custody. Leaving him behind, they forthwith kept on horseback and started for Stony Stratford. There they found the king with his attendants ready to pursue his journey and to leave that lodging for their use, as it was too <sup>small</sup> narrow for both companies. As soon as they came to his presence, they all alighted from their horses. The Duke of Buckingham said to them: "Go forward gentlemen and yeomen & keep your <sup>places</sup> order." So in good order did they come up to the king & fell on their knees, saluting his majesty with deep reverence. The King received them quite cheerfully & amiably as he was yet thoroughly ignorant of their secret intentions.
