

II. III. A. B.

生
向
送
二
部
三 年 三
十
九
年
六
月

- I a To take a leaf out of one's book.
b To keep in one's good books.
c in a brown study.
d On the spur of the moment.
e To turn up one's nose at a person.
f between ourselves.
- II There is carte blanche to them to go where they like.
- III Let us get to work, bare-headed, and girded with our plain leather straps - but we mean business.
- IV There is nothing like candour for a boy.
- V And the most provoking thing is, that no failures knock them up, or make them hold their hands, or think you, or me, or other sane people in the right.
- VI The sun shines almost warmly, and breakfast has siled all springs and loosened all tongues.
- VII Tom was somewhat inclined to resent the patronizing air of his new friend, a boy of just about his own height and age, but gifted with the most transcendent coolness and assurance, which Tom felt to be aggravating and hard to bear, but couldn't for the life of him help admiring and enjoying - especially when young my lord begins hectoring two or three loafing fellows, half porter, half stableman, with a strong touch of the blackguard.

II. III. A. B.

- I a To take a leaf out of one's book.
b To keep in one's good books.
- 12 c in a brown study.
d On the spur of the moment.
e To turn up one's nose at a person.
f between ourselves.
- 14II There is carte blanche to them to go where they like.
- 14III Let us get to work, bare-headed, and girded with our plain leather straps - but we mean business.
- 14V There is nothing like candour for a boy.
- V And the most provoking thing is, that no failures
- 15 Knock them up, or make them hold their hands, or think you, or me, or other sane people in the right.
- VI The sun shines almost warmly, and breakfast has oiled all springs and loosened all tongues.
- VII Tom was somewhat inclined to resent the patronizing air of his new friend, a boy of just about his own height and age, but gifted with the most transcendent coolness and assurance, which Tom felt to be aggravating and hard to bear, but couldn't for the life of him help admiring and envying - especially when young my lord begins hectoring two or three loafing fellows, half porter, half stableman, with a strong touch of the blackguard.

二部三年
明治三十九年六月

3
46
42
100

706
28
57
5
14